

In Support of Nixon in '70

Millionaire Lists Campaigners Who Got Total of $2 Million

By Martin Mintz

WASHINGTON, July 16 (WP).—Multimillionaire W. Clement Stone has made public the full list of 42 congressional and other candidates to whom he contributed and lent more than $2 million during the 1970 election campaign.

The Chicago insurance magnate told The Washington Post that he dipped into a fortune estimated at $450 million to "strengthen the Republican party" and to elect more legislators who would "zealously cooperate" in re-electing President Nixon.

Mr. Stone distributed the $2 million—$610,000 in contributions and $1,394,000 in loans, which he made contributions in 29 states.

Conservative Sen. James L. Buckley of New York, for example, got a $300,000 loan, which has been repaid in full, and an outright gift of $15,000.

Mr. Stone made his largest single expenditure in 1970 on behalf of the late Republican Sen. Ralph Smith, a $500,000 loan, of which $300,000 remains outstanding. Sen. Smith, who was defeated in Illinois by Sen. Adlai E. Stevenson 3d, also got a donation of $17,500.

Another Loser

Among congressional candidates, the top beneficiary was Republican Jay Wilkinson, who received a gift of $45,000 and a still outstanding loan of $25,000 for a unsuccessful race against incumbent Rep. Tom Steed in Oklahoma.

Mr. Wilkinson is the son of Bud Wilkinson, a former adviser to Presidents Kennedy, Johnson and Nixon. Mr. Stone is foremost among Mr. Nixon's super-contributors, having given him $2,812,500 for his 1968 campaign and $3,050,145 in 1972.

Mr. Stone's second largest contribution to a House candidate was $33,482 to right-wing Republican Phyllis Schlafly of Illinois. She lost to the incumbent Democrat, George E. Shimp.

Republican Gov. Ronald Reagan of California got $25,000, the largest contribution made by Mr. Stone to a gubernatorial candidate. Gov. Reagan defeated Democrat Jess Uregho.

The smallest gift on the list, $100, went to Rep. John Anderson, a moderate Illinois Republican. A member of the Senate select Watergate committee, Sen. Lowell E. Weicker Jr., is listed for $10,000.

Mr. Stone, in making the voluntary disclosure, said that none of the 1970 contributions was requested by President Nixon. The candidates were suggested, instead, by GOP officials and friends in Washington, Mr. Stone said.

A self-made man who founded and heads the Combined Insurance Companies of America, Mr. Stone met Mr. Nixon in 1964, when both served on the board of the Boys Clubs of America.

Gave Nearly $7 Million

Starting with the 1968 campaign, Mr. Stone has given almost $7 million to political candidates—Republicans, with rare exceptions. He has said that he divided all of his gifts among multiple committees so as to avoid gift taxes.

There is no limit now on contributions to federal candidates. But a bill, expected to be taken up by the Senate late this month, would limit the total of contributions to all federal candidates together to $100,000 from one person and $200,000 from a married couple.

Mr. Stone has denied a report that he had invited special Watergate prosecutor Archibald Cox to trace the uses of his contributions to Mr. Nixon's re-election campaign.

"I have repeatedly stated that my contributions have definitely not been involved in Watergate, because I know exactly to which committees the checks were paid," Mr. Stone said.

But because there is a possibility that some of the money he gave was "misused," he said that he will conduct his own inquiry into how the $2 million was spent.

Mr. Stone said of the monetary support he gave in 1970: "I wanted both houses of Congress, and particularly the Senate, to consist of more members willing to back Nixon's basic programs because their philosophy of what was best for America would coincide with his."

Numerous other supporters of the President have turned up as substantial contributors to congressional candidates. They include Walter Annenberg, ambassador to Britain; Thomas Pappas of Boston, who has wide-ranging business interests in Greece; Max Fisher of Detroit and Henry Salvador of Los Angeles, both oil men, and Henry Ford 3d, the auto executive.

Revising Code May Take Years

Crime Bill Gives Congress Long Sentence

By Warren Weaver Jr.

WASHINGTON, July 16 (NYT).—Congress, caught between multiplying problems and declining efficiency, may have reached a legislative impasse—the unpardonable sin of the unpardonable.

Attempting to rewrite the entire federal criminal code in one package, the lawmakers face the possibility that a bill can be so long, so complex and so controversial that it cannot be processed within the two-year life span to which each Congress is limited.

All legislation that has not been passed by both houses in identical form, and sent to the President for signature, dies automatically when a Congress adjourns at the end of its second year. Then a new set of representatives, elected the previous November, and a Senate with a third of its members newly elected, can—if they wish—resurrect such bills and begin processing them all over again.

Sponsors of the criminal code bill privately have conceded that there is no prospect of completing congressional action on the project before the end of 1974, and that there is considerable doubt that a succeeding two-year period will be long enough for the job.

Among the Problems

Among the problems that have brought action on a revised code to a virtual standstill are the following:

• Size. The version drafted by the Senate criminal law subcommittee is 538 pages long; the Nixon administration's alternative runs 336 pages. The line-by-line examination and amendment of a bill that is standard congressional procedure would take the most industrious committee many months.

• Controversy. Issues directly involved in rewriting and harmonizing the various elements of the code range from establishing new penalties for disclosing "national defense information" to abolishing insanity as a defense in criminal cases. Other provisions deal with such socially sensitive matters as capital punishment, abortion, obscenity and gun control.

• Professional interest. Lawyers compose 54 percent of the current Congress and 100 percent of the two judiciary committees that have jurisdiction over the criminal code, and they take particular interest in carefully scrutinizing changes in the rules of their profession.

• Politics. A Democratic Congress would not appear eager to present the kind of tough, law-and-order crime bill currently under discussion to President Nixon during his second term, particularly with the White House currently on the defensive on the Watergate issue.

And Mr. Nixon's successor after 1976, whether he be a Democrat or a Republican, will almost certainly want his attorney general to take a long look at a significant project like criminal-code revisions, making it unlikely that Congress could then complete action before 1980.

Began in January

Sen. John L. McClellan, D., Ark., chairman of the criminal law subcommittee, began the code-revision project just after the 93d Congress opened in January, but hearings on the nomination of L. Patrick Gray 3d as director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation and Elliot L. Richardson as attorney general, delayed subcommittee action.

The McClellan bill is a considerably toughened version of recommendations made two years earlier by the National Commission on Reform of Federal Criminal Laws, headed by former Gov. Edmund G. Brown of California, after a five-year study. About three months after the bill was introduced, the Justice Department offered its own revised code, prepared at the President's request.

The administration measure touched off protests over its provisions limiting access to both classified and unclassified government records. One provision would have barred a person accused of making public a classified document from defending himself with the argument that the document was improperly classified in the first place.

Under the present schedule, the McClellan subcommittee will continue holding hearings on the code through the summer and fall and will try to complete a final draft for full committee and Senate floor action in early 1974. But no one expects that the House can complete the same process in the remaining nine or 10 months of the year.

Ruckelshaus Said To Be Considering No. 2 Justice Job

WASHINGTON, July 16 (NYT).—William D. Ruckelshaus, who resigned as acting director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, has been asked to remain at the Justice Department in the post of deputy attorney general, according to informed sources within the department.

The offer, which Mr. Ruckelshaus's friends say he has "half-decided" to accept, was first tendered, by Attorney General Elliot L. Richardson a few weeks ago. But Mr. Ruckelshaus, 40, reportedly refused to give it serious consideration until after leaving the FBI.

The sources said that the offer was contingent upon finding a new post for Joseph T. Sneed, the present deputy attorney general. The administration is understood to be seeking a federal judgeship for Mr. Sneed.

Those close to Mr. Ruckelshaus say that he wants to run for the Senate in 1976 from his home state of Indiana. Thus, the friends say, his major concern is remaining in the public eye until then, something that he would be best able to achieve as the head of the Justice Department's day-to-day operations.

Auto Workers, GM Begin Negotiations

DETROIT, July 16 (AP).—Contract negotiations between General Motors Corp. and the United Auto Workers opened today, with a top executive of the auto giant saying that a strike in the industry can be avoided.

George Morris Jr., GM vice-president in charge of industrial relations, made the comment moments before GM executives held their first session with leaders of the UAW. UAW leaders made no statement but a group entered the talks bearing a huge blue and white cake inscribed "no and out"—a reference to a union goal of allowing auto workers with 30 years of experience to retire on full pension.

Sabena Spurns Dassault Plane

Boeing and Declining Dollar Win Order Over Strong Franc

By Clyde H. Farnsworth

PARIS, July 16 (NYT).—Sabena, the Belgian airline, has ordered 10 American airplanes instead of 10 French ones in a dramatic illustration of the way the devaluation of the dollar is beginning to help American sales overseas.

In political and industrial circles in France, where aircraft matters are particularly sensitive, the Belgians are being chided for their failure to show a "European spirit" in their decision. But such spirit would cost Sabena, one of Europe's biggest carriers, about 30 percent more on each plane it ordered.

Sabena turned to Boeing for its equipment order and will now take 10 models of the two-engine 737, which carries 115 passengers each. The alternative the airline had been studying was the twin-engine Mercure, which carries 140 passengers.

Erosion of Dollar

The price of the Boeing 737 is under $6 million. The price of the Mercure is 32 million francs. Because of the nearly constant erosion of the dollar's international value during the last two years, this works out to nearly $5 million at the latest exchange rate.

When the dollar was worth 5.5 French francs in 1969, instead of the present 4.10, the two planes would have been more competitive.

Boeing has been able to keep its prices low because it has already sold about 400 of the 737s. The Dassault-Breguet company, which makes the Mercure, has sold only 10, and these to an internal French airline, Air Inter, controlled by the French state. It is these effects of the dollar's depreciation that have made French and other European officials particularly anxious to arrest the slide.

In this case, Sabena stimulates employment not in Europe but in Seattle. At the same time, French-inspired efforts to create the base for an all-European aircraft industry are set back.

Temporary Settlement

Anxious over the possibility that European states might retaliate by setting up protectionist barriers, the United States came to a temporary settlement with Europe last weekend at Basel, Switzerland, when it undertook to support the dollar in the exchange markets.

That important accord helped stop the dollar's precipitous drop last week.

As in most aircraft contracts in Europe, Boeing and Dassault-Breguet had to make side offers to increase the attractiveness of their respective products.

The French company, whose major shareholder is Marcel Dassault, designer of the Mirage jet, took up half the capital of a Belgian company known as Sabena in an arrangement aimed at making Belgium a partner in the Mercure project. Sabena's share of the project was 49 percent.

Mr. Nixon's successor after 1976, whether he be a Democrat or a Republican, will almost certainly want his attorney general to take a long look at a significant project like criminal-code revisions, making it unlikely that Congress could then complete action before 1980.

Chief Drug Enforcer in U.S. Restricts 'No-Knock' Raids

WASHINGTON, July 16 (AP).

The government today issued guidelines designed to restrict the use of "no-knock" narcotics raids and promised swift punishment to agents who violate the new rule.

John R. Bartels Jr., acting head of the Drug Enforcement Administration, said the guidelines represent an administration "shift in emphasis" toward the protection of individual rights.

The new guidelines require federal drug agents to obtain the approval of Mr. Bartels or his deputy for any "no-knock" raids, require agents to get a warrant from a federal magistrate "when-ever humanly practical" before making a forced entry, instruct agents to wear badges or other identifying insignia when making raids and prohibit agents from firing their guns except in self-defense, defense of another person or on official target practice.

Mr. Bartels acknowledged that many of the requirements of the new guidelines were already included in the agency's manual when agents allegedly abused individual rights in mistaken raids in Illinois and elsewhere.

Curfewment Seen

But he said the issuance of a separate manual on search and arrest policies and his personal insistence that the rules be observed should curtail repetition of such incidents.

He said he could not guarantee that abuses would never occur, but added that "I can guarantee one thing—that every federal agent will know what is expected of him and the consequences of violations."

He said he also has asked the state's medical officer to review the value of requiring applicants to take psychological tests "to screen out applicants unsuited for the drug enforcement profession."

Some Prisoners Surrender in Virginia Revolt

RICHMOND, Va., July 16 (AP).

State troopers using dogs and tear gas today recaptured three cell block rebels from the last of the three cell blocks at the Virginia State Farm and moved to retake two dormitories still held by the inmates.

Armed with pipes and other makeshift weapons, an estimated 200 of the farm's 1,000 prisoners threw up barricades last night and defied guards to flush them out.

Prison spokesmen traced the origin of the disturbance to an incident in which two prisoners reportedly became abusive with a guard and tried to strike him. The last of the three cell blocks was recaptured by some 250 state policemen, guards, sheriff's deputies and volunteer firemen without a battle. The doors were opened and the prisoners walked out into custody.

One trooper and one inmate were reported injured, neither seriously.

Strike Leader Evading Arrest

Unionist Calls Thieu Party Failure

By Thomas W. Lippman
SAIGON, July 16 (UPI).—Nguyen Van Cuot is remarkably pugnacious for a man with a price on his head, a man who has been hiding from the South Vietnamese police since April.

"I have to keep moving," he said this morning in an interview arranged by a friend. "I never sleep anywhere more than two nights." He described his separation from his family as "an enforced vacation."

Mr. Cuot is vice-president of the Railroad Workers' Union. He is one of three members of the union's hierarchy who went into hiding on April 17, the day the union staged a brief work stoppage in a pay dispute with the government and police began rounding up the organizers.

The wage increase the workers were seeking has since been granted, but the consequences of the stoppage have escalated into a major political incident. The president of four other unions who supported the action have been arrested, imprisoned without trial and denounced as Communist agents. One of them died in prison by his own hand on instructions from his Communist leaders, according to the Saigon government; by police torture, according to union sources.

A government spokesman said the arrests followed the discovery of documentary evidence that the union leaders were planning to form a Communist-dominated labor organization.

Union officials and political opponents of the government have ridiculed this claim, portraying

ing the crackdown as an attempt by President Nguyen Van Thieu to crush union resistance to his new political party.

"I'm not a Communist," Mr. Cuot said. "I don't accept the Communist's political decisions. They are atheists, I am a Buddhist." What is happening, he said, is that Mr. Thieu's recruiters "are trying to make us move from union work to political work. But Thieu's Democracy party has failed to win any support in the ranks of the workers."

If it were known how many people in South Vietnam share the political views of Mr. Cuot, it would be a lot easier to predict the country's future. Despite his professed anti-Communism, he rejects the current government as "a police state," regards the war as an outdated relic that is irrelevant in the current international context and hopes for pressure from the United States to force Mr. Thieu to reach a political settlement with the National Liberation Front.

"I'm not hoping for a coup," Mr. Cuot said. "If the war goes on, the dying will go on, too, but a coup will also bring death."

U.S. Planes Try To Halt Reds in Cambodia Battle

PHNOM PENH, July 16 (UPI).—U.S. warplanes bombed within seven miles of the capital today in support of Cambodian government forces trying to repulse a Communist attack to the south, field reports said.

The reports and military sources said there was fighting to the west, southwest and northwest of the capital. "The situation is very grave," Gen. Un Kau said.

Battle reports said Cambodian troops evacuated their positions to the south of Takhmau and about six miles southeast of the capital and swam across the Bassac River.

The reports said that some residents of Takhmau had packed their belongings and joined refugees from other parts of the country streaming into the capital.

The high command said fighting continued sporadically north-east of the capital on Highway 7 and southeast along Highway 1. The reports said there was fighting 10 miles southwest on Highway 3. They said government forces there were reported using armored cars, artillery and U.S. air strikes to halt rebel advances.

What I hope is that there will be good-faith execution of the Paris agreement."

Mr. Cuot, who was born in Saigon in 1919, has a wife and seven children whom he said he has not seen since he went underground.

He said he had adopted the principle that union work and politics do not mix and had stood by it except for a brief period in 1963, when he supported a Buddhist protest against President Ngo Dinh Diem. Mr. Cuot was arrested at that time and released when Diem was overthrown later that year. He said he was one of 11 founders of the Railroad Workers' Union in 1954.

Awakening Article 11

Referring to the arrest of union leaders, Mr. Cuot said:

"This can't go on forever, it can't last indefinitely. Sooner or later this government is going to have to respect the Paris peace agreement and carry out Article 11."

That article provides that both Saigon and the Viet Cong will "immediately" act to "ensure the democratic liberties of the people," including freedom of speech and organization. Official spokesmen for the Saigon government, however, have said that current martial-law restrictions on speech, assembly and the press will not be lifted until there is no longer a threat to the country's security.

"It's useless to continue the war—useless for both sides," Mr. Cuot said. "This was presented to us as a war against the Communists—Brezhnev went to Washington and signed agreements with Nixon, Kissinger is going to Peking. The relationship of America, Russia and China is changing—the war against Communism doesn't mean anything anymore."

Relman Morin, Newsman, Pulitzer Winner

NEW YORK, July 16 (AP).—Relman Pat Morin, 65, who twice won the Pulitzer Prize during his career with the Associated Press, was found dead in his apartment this morning.

He had been in ill health and death was attributed to natural causes.

Mr. Morin won the Pulitzer Prize for his coverage of the Korean War in 1951 and for his eyewitness reporting of rioting over school integration at Little Rock, Ark., in 1958.

He joined AP in 1934 and served in Los Angeles, New York, London, Algiers, Tokyo, Cairo, New Delhi, Italy and Korea. He was in charge of AP operations in France for two years.

Mr. Morin spent the year 1930 traveling in China and studying in Chinese universities. After joining the AP, he returned to the Far East from 1937 until the attack on Pearl Harbor, which caught him in Saigon in what was then French Indochina.

He was interned by the Japanese and examined on a charge of espionage. He was told that the charge would be dropped if he would make propaganda broadcasts from Tokyo. He refused. After seven months, he was released and returned to the United States.

5,000 Chinese Plunge To Hail Mao's Swim
PEKING, July 16 (Reuters).—Nearly 5,000 Chinese plunged into Peking's Kunning Lake today to mark the seventh anniversary of Chairman Mao Tse-tung's famous swim in the Yangtze River.

The chairman, presumably helped by a strong current, was reported to have swum more than nine miles in 65 minutes in the Yangtze near the city of Wuhan in central China. A defector recently cast doubts on reports of Mr. Mao's swim.

The exploit was apparently designed to demonstrate to the Chinese masses that Chairman Mao, then aged 73, was still in vigorous health.

Export Curbs Termed 'Aggression'

France Bitterly Attacks U.S. Over Soybeans at EEC Talks

By David Haworth

BRUSSELS, July 16 (UPI).—France's Jacques Chirac startled the Common Market farm ministers meeting here today by accusing the United States of "aggression" and "whimsy" in its recent limitation of soybean exports.

The minister said that the European Economic Community's commission had shown itself incapable of dealing with such emergencies and that the EEC should take immediate steps to safeguard its own production of protein, in particular oilseed and oil cake.

But the tone and bitterness of Mr. Chirac's remarks, which shocked his colleagues, were not confined to the Americans. He turned also on the EEC agriculture commissioner, Pierre Lardinois, for his suggestion last week that the nine EEC countries should turn themselves from net exporters of sugar into net importers.

Mr. Chirac gave the commission notice that this idea was completely unacceptable to his country. He said France, which is the largest Common Market sugar producer, could not even use Mr. Lardinois's proposal as a basis for discussion.

Turns on Countryman
"I am astonished that Europe should be asked to trim sugar production," Mr. Chirac said, adding that the commission proposal was nothing less than "ridiculous." At this point, the minister turned his criticism on Claude Cheysson, commissioner with responsibility for the EEC budget and developing countries, saying that Mr. Cheysson, a Frenchman, was making a mockery of French interests.

This last remark was especially badly received by the other ministers since EEC commissioners do not hold a brief for their own national interests. Regardless of nationality, they are under oath to serve a European rather than sectarian interest. There was widespread comment in the Council of Ministers' corridors that Mr. Chirac had overstepped the bounds of rhetoric and good sense in seeking to embarrass Mr. Cheysson.

But Mr. Chirac agreed that France would take part in working-group discussions about sugar, although he warned that all the principles on which the commission's document was based would be vigorously questioned and BOGOTA, Colombia, July 16 (Reuters).—Colombia and the Vatican signed a new concordat here last week under which Colombians will be able to contract civil marriages and obtain civil divorce without fear of formal excommunication by the Catholic Church.

The concordat, which regulates church-state relations and church affairs in Colombia, replaces an earlier accord signed in 1887 which penalized civil marriages and divorce with excommunication.

The concordat also introduces the principle of religious liberty—permitting Colombians to join the church of their choice.

India Election Is Demanded By Opposition

NEW DELHI, July 16 (NYT).—The second party in India, the Jan Sangh, today demanded national elections, saying that the nation's leadership was corrupt and unable to thwart India's "drift."

In a bitter attack on Prime Minister Indira Gandhi and the ruling Congress party, L. K. Advani, the Jan Sangh president, said: "The so-called Indira wave has ebbed away. In its place, a powerful anti-Congress wave is sweeping the country." Advani's remarks were made to the party's general council in the city of Bhubli in Mysore. The rightist Hindu party, which claims a membership of about 2 1/2 million, is especially popular in northern India among students, farmers and small traders. "A strongly nationalist party, the Jan Sangh has sought in the last year to mute its anti-Muslim reputation. It has gained some success, notably in local municipal elections. In the old and new city of Delhi.

Several bitter attacks were made against the government's economic and political policies. In a widely discussed article in the Illustrated Weekly of India, a popular, often pro-government journal, the nation's leadership was blamed for "drift" as well as "corruption, rife, hypocrisy, massive bribery and administrative failure."

The demand for an election is the first to be made by a major political party here. The vote for prime minister is not expected until 1976, although a key election is scheduled early next year in Uttar Pradesh, India's largest state.

The Jan Sangh also urged new elections in states under "presidential rule," or the control of the central government. Within the last few months, four state governments ruled by the Congress party have fallen because their leaders had scant local support. The four states are Uttar Pradesh, Bihar, Gujarat and Orissa.

Pakistani POW Case Scheduled By World Court

THE HAGUE, July 16 (AP)—The International Court of Justice announced today it will schedule special sessions to determine whether the jurisdiction in the legal battle for the repatriation of 195 Pakistani prisoners of war accused of genocide.

The court, by an 8-4 vote, gave Pakistan until Oct. 1 to file submissions. India, which has so far refused to plead before the court, was given until Dec. 15 to file.

Pakistan has been seeking a court ruling that the prisoners from the 1971 war—now held by India but wanted for war crimes by Bangladesh—should be sent home to face trial. The Pakistanis have argued that this would be in accordance with the Geneva conventions and have indicated that Pakistan would be prepared to recognize Bangladesh once the matter is settled.

Rome Newspaper Struck in Protest Over New Editor

ROME, July 16 (Reuters).—The staff of the Rome daily Il Messaggero today began an indefinite strike timed to coincide with the presentation of its new government to parliament for a vote of confidence.

The staff is protesting the appointment of Luigi Barzani, author of "The Italians" as editor after rightist magazine owner Edilio Rusconi bought 50 percent of the newspaper's shares. Mr. Barzani, a former deputy of the right-center Liberal party, was to have taken over from Editor Alessandro Perrone, who controls the other 50 percent of the shares, two weeks ago, but he was barred by a crowd of angry journalists. The new editor was taking legal action against Mr. Perrone.

The staff said it was beginning its strike today to influence the new center-left government to block the "raid on Il Messaggero" carried out with the approval of the previous (center) government. The leftist parties are supporting Mr. Perrone since they believe the take-over is an attempt to shift Il Messaggero's independent line to the right.

U.S. Group Leaves China

SHANGHAI, July 16 (AP).—Eight U.S. congressmen and their wives left for the United States today after a two-week official tour of China.

Indira Gandhi on a compromise settlement of $940 million of U.S.-owned rupees.

A State Department spokesman said today that the buildings were being turned over to India under an agreement with the United States to do so when it no longer needed them.

But the spokesman, Paul W. Hare, said that additional development assistance to India by the United States was possible, as well as continuation of a $53-million food-grain program distributed by American voluntary agencies. American aid to India has totaled about $10 billion during the last two decades. Mr. Hare said that, on the question of development aid, "We are discussing a number of topics as possible elements of a future cooperative relationship with India." But he acknowledged that no final decisions have been made on continuation of American assistance.

To Discuss Rupees Mr. Hare also said that Mr. Moynihan will discuss the $940 million in rupees owed by India to the United States, largely for the purchase of surplus food grains to avert famine. The interest being generated by that loan could bring the figure to between $2 billion and $3 billion before the debt is entirely paid by the end of the century.

The State Department has withheld details on terms of the settlement, but it is known that the United States will retain the claim on an undiscovered amount of rupees. The rest apparently will be forgiven and no longer will represent a possible claim against the Bank of India.

In the fall of 1971, Mrs. Gandhi said that India would not require further food assistance on credit sales from the United States. But a school-lunch program and a food program for pregnant mothers have been continuing and, in the year that ended June 30, amounted to $53 million.

London Court Cites Woman In Sex Affair

LONDON, July 16 (AP).—Norma Levy, the convent-educated girl at the center of a sex scandal that cost two government ministers their jobs, made a brief appearance in a court today charged with attempting to procure a woman as a prostitute.

Mrs. Levy was remanded on bail totalling $10,000 until another hearing July 31.

The 26-year-old woman had her face covered with a multi-colored scarf when she arrived in a police car at Marylebone Magistrates Court in north London.

About 30 persons jostled for room in the 16-seat public gallery of the court. About 50 more crowded around the entrance. Mrs. Levy, who was born in Ireland, was listed in court as a housewife. It was charged that on days unknown between Jan. 1 and Dec. 31, 1971, in the greater London area, she attempted to procure a woman to become a common prostitute. She made no plea and did not speak in court.

Mrs. Levy was arrested yesterday at London Airport when she returned from Spain. She and her husband, Colin Levy, had fled to Morocco after two newspapers reported Scotland Yard was investigating Tory ministers who had gotten mixed up with call girls.

Lord Lambton, the air force minister, and Lord Jellicoe, the government leader in the House of Lords, resigned and admitted that they had been patronizing prostitutes.

Spain Holds Husband

DENIA, Spain, July 16 (AP).—Mrs. Levy's husband testified today before a Spanish judge in connection with a complaint by his wife that he tried to run her down with his car last week-end. It was a secret session and no details leaked out.

E. Berlin Lifts Ban on Passes To Youth Fête

BERLIN, July 16 (UPI).—The East German authorities have lifted a ban on wall passes for West Berliners during the July 28-Aug. 5 World Youth Festival in East Berlin, a West Berlin spokesman said today.

Last week, East German officials rejected applications for the festival period, saying that they could not cope with a flood of West Berlin tourists at the same time that thousands of youth delegates were in the city.

West Berlin protested the ban as a violation of the Big-Four agreement under which West Berliners may enter the East for a total of 30 days a year.

Catholic Churchmen Attack France's Nuclear-Test Plans

PARIS, July 16 (Reuters).—A public debate between Roman Catholic Church and military leaders over France's nuclear policy intensified today as the opening explosion in the bomb tests was awaited in the South Pacific.

The first nuclear explosion at Mururoa Atoll in French Polynesia was expected early this week. The French Defense Ministry remained silent about the plans, but Defense Minister Robert Galley said that the government was going ahead with testing despite the international protests.

The protesters were joined by the Roman Catholic bishop of Orleans, Mgr. Olivier Riobe, who issued a statement attacking the tests. And Cardinal Jean Daniélou of France, writing in the newspaper Le Figaro today, said that "to fight against the arms race is a form of fight for peace. For this arms race always carries the risk of use of nuclear weapons which are not simply deterrents."

Their statements followed a letter published in Le Figaro on Saturday from Adm. Marc de Joybert, chief of staff of the French Navy, in which he told church leaders to keep out of military matters.

The Gaullist newspaper, La Nation, joined the controversy today in a front-page editorial which asked why French bishops reproached the government for providing the country with an up-to-date weapon.

"It is detestable, no doubt," La Nation added, "but which weapon is not?" Le Figaro backed the government in an editorial today asking why France should stand aside when other great powers kept their nuclear weapons.

"Why these bitter campaigns against France when neither Russia, nor the United States, nor China, nor Great Britain are the objects of disapproving demonstrations in France?" it asked. In the Pacific, meanwhile, final preparations appeared to have been made for the start of the testing, which has been criticized in Australia, New Zealand, Asia, South America and Europe.

2d Frigate to Patrol

WELLINGTON, New Zealand, July 16 (UPI).—The New Zealand frigate Canterbury, now heading for the French nuclear-test zone at Mururoa Atoll, will patrol inside the French 72-mile danger area with the frigate Otago for a short time, Prime Minister Norman Kirk said today.

The next point of interest, other than an explosion, will be the arrival of the Canterbury at the South Pacific test area 720 miles southeast of Tahiti, Mr. Kirk said. "For a short time, there will be two protest frigates inside the zone," he said.

Immigration and Mining Minister Fraser Coleman, who is on board the Otago, will be transferred to the Canterbury while both ships are inside the zone, he said.

Journalists Set For Walkout in Athens Today

ATHENS, July 16 (UPI).—The Union of Athens Journalists announced today an indefinite strike, beginning tomorrow, against six Athens newspapers.

The union said the strike will begin at 0600 local time Tuesday and will go on indefinitely. The journalists are seeking a 30 percent rise in salaries, because of the climb in the cost-of-living index.

The union said that the publishers of three Athens newspapers will be exempted from the strike because they have accepted the journalists' demands. The Union of Publishers said that the strike was illegal and in violation of the collective agreement signed with journalists in April, 1972. They said they will consider the strike as breach of the agreement, which expires in October.

Irish Seize Weapons for IRA On Vessel in Dublin Harbor

DUBLIN, July 16 (AP).—Irish police and troops raided a British freighter in Dublin Harbor today and seized eight cases of arms and ammunition bound from Montreal to Northern Ireland.

Police said the "fairly large" consignment of weapons was destined for the Irish Republican Army, which is fighting to oust Britain from Northern Ireland and to unite it with the republic. The weapons were seized aboard the freighter Manchester Vigour, which docked last night after arriving from Montreal. The owners said the ship made no other stops on the way.

One man was arrested. His identity was not made public. Police said they acted on a tipoff and when they went aboard the ship they went straight to one of the 51 containers to be disembarked in Dublin. It contained the 11 cases of arms.

"Machinery Parts" Officials said the container was addressed to a fictitious address and was marked as containing "machinery parts." They declined to make public the name of the consigner in Canada.

It was the biggest arms haul since March 29 when the Irish Navy seized a shipment of weapons aboard the West German freighter Claudia. The freighter was boarded off the coast of Cork.

Meanwhile, the Dublin government, reportedly angered by a news conference held in the heart of Dublin by leaders of the Provisional wing of the IRA, prepared a statement for the Dail (parliament) on its policy toward the outlawed organization.

Officials said the statement will be made either tomorrow or Wednesday by Justice Minister Patrick Cosgrave.

"Complete Withdrawal"

IRA Provisional leaders David O'Connell, Seamus Trooney and others reaffirmed their vow to continue their campaign of violence and terrorism in Northern Ireland until "Britain agrees to our demands for a complete withdrawal of her forces."

The news conference was held in a Dublin hotel with most of the Provisional high command present. All of the men are on the run and subject to arrest.

The meeting was called to announce publication of a new booklet outlining the IRA's version of the battle in Ulster and its aims for the future.

Irish police seized thousands of copies of the booklet in Drogheda Saturday before it went on sale. Officials believe most of the first printing was rounded up in the raid.

Few incidents were reported during the day in Northern Ireland. In one, a policeman and a British soldier were injured when a car bomb exploded in front of a bank in Armagh. An army bomb-disposal expert who had just examined the car was unhurt. The bank was badly damaged.

RAF Pilot Killed In Oman Attack On Insurgents

LONDON, July 16 (AP).—A British Royal Air Force pilot has been killed flying a strike mission against guerrillas in Oman, the Defense Ministry said today.

The pilot, Flight Lt. Michael Drybanski, 25, was attached to the forces of the sultan of Oman, "engaged from time to time in operations against insurgent tribesmen," a spokesman said.

The ministry could not say how many RAF pilots were attached to the sultan's military forces. But the spokesman said Lt. Drybanski, killed when his jet was downed by ground fire last Monday, was the first RAF flier to die in Oman.

The spokesman said Lt. Drybanski was flying a jet fighter belonging to the sultan.

Greeks Warned That Hoarding Perils Economy

ATHENS, July 16 (NYT).—Greeks who are hoarding goods and foods to stave off the effects of inflation have been warned by the government to desist or face economic ruin.

The warning was issued yesterday by Deputy Premier Nikolaos Makazanos in the wake of a widespread shopping spree by Greeks who are alarmed by currency depreciation.

"It is absolutely certain," Mr. Makazanos said, "that those seized by the fever of senseless purchases and hoarding are working for their own economic loss."

"The unhealthy psychology created here by the worldwide monetary upheaval," he said, "is leading people to rush to buy a commodity worth 10 drachmas for 20, 30 or even 50 on the naive assumption they will sell it later for 100."

He said that hoarders would regret their actions, adding, "the time will come when they will have to get rid of their stocks at a loss."

Inflation has been aggravated by the government's policy of maintaining the drachma at its 20-year parity of 30 to one U.S. dollar. Rising prices in Europe, coupled with the revaluation of most European currencies, led to soaring living costs and a reduction in the purchasing power of the drachma.

Israeli Soldier Stabbed, Robbed

TEL AVIV, July 16 (UPI).—An unknown assailant stabbed an Israeli soldier in the back and took his submachine gun in an attack near a religious shrine holy to both Jews and Muslims in Hebron, in the occupied West Bank of the Jordan, the military command said today.

The early-morning assault on the soldier, who was injured slightly, occurred near the Tomb of Patriarchs, traditional site of the tombs of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob and their wives.

Enlightening Episode

There was much that was baffling about the detention of two Canadian members of the international truce team in South Vietnam and the bad treatment accorded them. Admittedly, the truce arrangements are weak to the point of chaos. But such a patent affront to international opinion requires some explanation—and that neither the Viet Cong nor the North Vietnamese seem inclined to provide.

It could be assumed, at the outset, that Capt. Patten and Capt. Fletcher had fallen into the hands of a semi-isolated band of Viet Cong, which, existing precariously, was taking no chances with men who looked and talked very much like Americans. But when it became clear to the higher commands that such a mistake had been made, why the long delay in correcting it? Surely the Viet Cong are not so anarchic that orders from above, in a matter of this importance, can be defied with impunity.

Apparently, the two Canadians were being used as hostages to obtain local military advantages. The fact that they were Canadian, and that their delegation had won a reputation for applying the truce equitably, may have been a factor; the North Vietnamese prefer the kind of preferential treatment they have received from the Communist representatives on the international commission, and see no loss for themselves in the imminent departure of Canada from this frustrating job.

Be that as it may, the episode of the Canadians sheds some light on a portion of the Vietnamese problem that has been obscured of late by the publicity accorded the wrongs inflicted on the land by the American military and the Saigon government. It is a reminder of what was well recognized in the early days of the Viet Cong operations, the raids on villages and the killing of the villagers, the many ruthless acts committed in the name of revolution.

This does not, of course, excuse the follies and the failures of the American intervention. But it does help to explain in part how that intervention came about, and why it had so much support—until the scale of repression became so great that revolution set in. It also emphasizes the plain fact that civil war is hell compounded, and that, however virtuous the goals on either side may be, the means used by both are often appalling.

The Canadian captives emerged from their ordeal without permanent harm. But what was done to them, in their capacity as truce observers, more than hints at the fate of many opponents of the Viet Cong in the past—and what could happen in the future. No American should view his country's course in Indochina with any pride. But neither is he required to accept the Communists there as the bearers of light or to anticipate their future actions with any confidence in their humanity.

Diplomatic Disservice

The U.S. Senate's Foreign Relations Committee made an unhappy error of judgment, we believe, in rejecting 9 to 7 the nomination of G. McMurtre Godley—a career diplomat who served most recently as ambassador to Laos—to be assistant secretary of state for East Asian affairs. The nomination was set aside, Chairman Fulbright explained, because in Laos Mr. Godley was "so intimately associated with Vietnam policy and such an enthusiastic activist" that he should not serve in a responsible East Asian position under the new conditions emerging now. Yet how could any ambassador to Laos fall to be "intimately associated with Vietnam policy"? Should a bureaucrat whose competence is otherwise acknowledged be penalized because he was "enthusiastic" about the policy he was obligated by his oath to carry out? The President made essentially this point in his strong protest to the committee over its handling of the appointment. By the logic of Mr. Fulbright, Foreign Relations would confirm for new Asian posts only those diplomats who, in their last Asian jobs, had resigned.

It is hard to avoid wondering if the committee took on Mr. Godley not so much out of reservations about his personal fitness but out of its own bitterness over Mr. Nixon's Indochina policy and its own rivalry with the President over policy-making power. The diplomat is in that sense a victim of disputes not of his own making. We say this not because of any admiration for the policy in Laos which Mr. Godley supervised—a policy we have ourselves repeatedly faulted. The point is, however, that it is in the nation's interest to keep its career diplomats service insulated from the policy arguments and institutional power struggles which are inevitably the stuff of politics. No way else can the independence of judgment and the integrity of the foreign service be better protected. One would have thought the point had been adequately made by the purge of the State Department's China hands which the late Senator McCarthy pressed a generation ago. We would not deny Senator Fulbright's contention that the choice of men serving at Mr. Godley's level can affect the shaping of policy. But we would reply that congressional attempts to fine-tune policy by manipulating the career of professional foreign service officers are laden with heavy risk.

There is, after all, no shortage of legitimate ways in which a determined legislature can effectively make its mark on foreign policy. It can legislate. It can use its power of the purse. It can hold hearings, disseminate information and otherwise attempt to influence public and official opinion. It can block confirmation of policy-level presidential appointees, such as the secretary of state. Intervening in the workings of the career foreign service is not only a troubling but also a rather ineffectual way to send a President the message that his foreign policy is not what the Congress thinks it ought to be.

General Peron's Argentina

With the resignation of the figurehead president elected only last spring, Argentina has committed itself to a fateful political experiment: Giving over immense government power to a septuagenarian, Juan Peron, whose excesses had led the army to remove him from office in 1955 and who has spent most of the intervening years in plush exile. Yet on the heels of his stand-in's sweeping victory last March, in the first elections since his ouster which his followers had been permitted to contest freely, he returned to Argentina, attracting a welcoming crowd of no fewer than three million people. Perhaps only in a country which has experienced civil disorder of Argentina's duration and intensity can there be a true comprehension of the expectations held out now for Mr. Peron. In fact, by a fresh gesture of the same military which once stripped him of the title, he is "General" Peron again.

General Peron has proved himself as ready and eager to fulfill the role of national savior as the mass of Argentines have been to thrust it upon him. Neither his 77 years nor his long absence nor the great difficulties ahead of rebuilding a deteriorating economy and suppressing civil strife seem to have moved him. Since his homecoming, he has faced at once to his left and his right, doling out appointments, assurances and pledges to a broad spectrum of political factions and economic interest groups and apparently consolidating their support at every step. It has been, close observers agree, a virtuoso political performance, belying the simplistic label "dictator" often placed on him. General Peron has not succeeded, or apparently tried, to accommodate the radical guerrillas held responsible for a continuing series of kidnappings and takeovers. But it seems to be the expectation of practically everyone else that he will manage to cope with them once he formally takes power. That should be over the next few weeks when new elections, a formality but a constitutional requirement, are held.

The largest question mark is the attitude of the military. General Peron has courted the armed forces carefully since his return. Many observers say that the social composition of the officer class has changed in a direction favorable to him and that the military has scant taste for the kind of strongman rule which would be the only mode available to it now. At any rate, Mr. Peron personifies policies which no likely individual or institutional challenger seems able to embody in any significant way: Improvement of the living standards of the poor and affirmation of national dignity. His pursuit of those populist and nationalist policies in his previous term in office led to his ouster by coup, but this time around the army itself stands discredited by its demonstrated ineptitude to rule on its own. This gives General Peron a broad opening, and a great responsibility too.

The Gap Between Law and Lawyers

By Lesley Oelsner

NEW YORK—Whatever else the Watergate scandal may mean, wherever else it may lead in debate and reform, it has already raised disturbing questions for the U.S. legal profession. One of the main questions, as many see it, is why there seems to be such a gap between law and lawyers.

There has always been a gap, in reputation at least. For centuries law has been considered the basis of civilized society. For just as long, lawyers have been criticized and even reviled—by playwrights such as Plautus and Shakespeare, by newspaper editorials and by clients.

But Watergate—in which lawyers have admitted to crimes ranging from burglary to obstruction of justice—has shown graphically that the gap is more than a matter of reputation alone. More importantly, it has focused public attention on an inconsistency that has pervaded the legal community for centuries: The legal profession has always taken the official stance that lawyers are "guardians of the law." But most lawyers—whether in private practice, in government or in business—have always paid far more attention to the special interests of their clients, candidates or companies than to the broad legal issues.

The key lesson of Watergate, particularly in the view of critics of lawyers, is that the profession must do far more than it has done to insure that lawyers do indeed try to "guard" the law.

Some Clues

No one is willing to say precisely how extensive this gap is between law and lawyers. Nor is anyone ready to spell out the reasons. But Watergate, to many experts, provides some clues.

Much of what the Watergate lawyers did was motivated, apparently, not so much by self-interest in the narrow sense, but by a "higher" interest—getting the President re-elected.

And that pattern, according to some observers, is analogous to the lawyer-client relationship in more everyday matters such as divorce and negligence cases.

"The main evil involved in Watergate is one which is prevalent throughout our legal system," said James Kirby, dean of the Ohio University Law School at Columbus, who is one of the nation's experts on legal ethics. "Clients expect lawyers to do anything to win their cases, he said, and often lawyers 'don't say no'."

The profession must insist that lawyers do say "no" to clients' demands for improper behavior, Kirby said, and one way to do this would be by teaching ethics in law school, using specific examples of what may and may not be done.

There is another analogy between the Watergate affair and everyday law practice. The lawyers involved in Watergate knew that what they were doing was illegal—the criminal laws are quite clear as to perjury and burglary. But they did not expect to get caught.

The canons of ethics—at least the new version promulgated in 1969 by the American Bar Association and subsequently adopted by various states—are also specific about certain forms of misbehavior. But the profession's disciplinary efforts have been inadequate.

Need for Rules

The Watergate affair, some observers say, also indicates that the legal profession needs not only increased disciplinary proceedings, but also some new rules on which the proceedings can be based.

Government and politics have been heavily weighted with attorneys for centuries. The majority of the men who drafted the Constitution, for example, were lawyers. For decades, lawyers have either run or helped to direct businesses. Yet the canons of ethics apply for the most part mainly to law practices engaged in the private practice of law.

Other than some specific rules about prosecutors, and some general rules about being honest that apply to all attorneys, there is little discussion in the canons about the special duties of lawyers who become politicians or businessmen. Nor is there much discussion about lawyers with corporate clients.

There have been some efforts to spell out guidelines for lawyers in government, but they have not been too successful. Kirby notes that a special committee recommended several years ago that lawyers give up their practices if they go to Congress. This recommendation did not win the support of the organized bar.

The reformers did manage to have a rule included in the canons that says that congressmen may not lend their names to a law firm unless they are actively engaged in their practice.

As some lawyers see it, two factors have helped bring about the gap in reputation between lawyers and law.

One is the fact that while the law is indeed noble, many people become lawyers for less than noble reasons.

"Lawyers as a group are no more dedicated to justice of public service than a private-public utility is dedicated to giving light," says David Mellinkoff of the University of California, Los Angeles, in a new book about lawyers.

"The profession is a public profession because it exists to satisfy a public need," he says. "But individual lawyers are members of that public profession to satisfy private personal needs."

The other reason is that the lawyer's job is not always consistent with what the public views broadly as "justice."

Thus justice would seem to demand that a person who has committed a crime—especially one who admits committing a crime—be called to account for it. Yet the defendant is entitled to a fair trial and to representation by counsel; to give that adequate representation, the lawyer should know whether the defendant has done what he is accused of having done.

The law, therefore, creates an "attorney-client privilege" in which the lawyer is allowed to keep that confession a secret. There is an exception: The lawyer "may"—not "must"—reveal the intention of a client to commit a crime.

There is another exception, at least in the original canons as passed by the American Bar Association—the lawyer is required to report perjury.

To some observers, there is an even more crucial reason for the basic discrepancy. The legal profession, they say, simply has not stressed ethics.

Law schools have done little to teach ethics, partly because of the traditional view that "morals can't be taught" and partly, some professors say, because students want practical information about their careers.

Peace With Honor

By Anthony Lewis

LONDON—Torture during interrogation, or as a disciplinary measure within prisons, is no longer even motivated by a desire to gather "intelligence" . . . Torture is widely used not only as an instrument of intimidation but as an end in itself . . . In many instances torture has become no more or less than a matter of habit.

Those are some phrases—some of the milder ones—from a report recently issued by Amnesty International, the highly-respected independent organization concerned with political prisoners around the world. The subject was the situation of the 100,000 or more civilians detained by the Saigon government.

The report described in revolting detail what is done to human beings in the prisons and interrogation centers of South Vietnam: "The use of electricity, beating, water, the crippling and death that result. It named victims and described cases in convincing detail. It called the situation, altogether, 'one of the most serious cases of political repression in the world today.'"

The Amnesty report noted a few paragraphs in some serious British and American newspapers. Most of the mass media paid no attention at all. It was just some more of the familiar horror of Vietnam.

It is not surprising that people turn off the moral pain of Vietnam. There are limits to outrage, to tears. Tales of misery, however true, eventually weary the audience. People instinctively protect themselves from being incapacitated by despair.

But individual escape cannot end public responsibility. Mass injustice, anywhere, claims the concern of mankind, for it diminishes and threatens all of us.

Nor can the cases of mistreatment of American war prisoners in North Vietnam excuse massive and continuing official terror in the South.

Can the stories be true? That is what some people in the West would ask, finding it difficult to face the horrors reported. But there is no escape that way. For the situation of political prisoners in South Vietnam has been seen and graphically described by a wide variety of observers: American congressmen, correspondents, doctors and many others.

The leading British commercial television company, Granada, did a careful program on Saigon's political prisoners. Among others it interviewed two American physicians, Dr. James and Dr. David Barton, in a hospital in Quang Ngai.

"People come to the prisoner ward at the hospital often immediately after they've been tortured," Jane Barton said, because prison officials "prefer not to have a dead body at the interrogation center . . . The torture that we see the results of most frequently is (screaming) electrical wires to people's toes, fingers, or sensitive parts of their bodies."

The Bartons had films and still photographs of some of the victims. Two were women who had been beaten on the head until their skulls fractured and they became paralyzed on one side of their bodies. One was a young girl, the other a 67-year-old woman.

Granada also showed 60-year-old Mrs. "Ba Shan," who was blinded by lime thrown in her face by guards when she was held in the Tiger cages on Con Son Island. It showed some other freed prisoners from Con Son being treated by a former American Air Force doctor, John Champlain. Dr. Champlain described how various prisoners lost the use of their legs by being confined in the cages or shackled to their beds.

Cynicism

The Saigon government, of Nguyen Van Thieu, is marvelously cynical in its discussion of these matters. It says that there are no "political prisoners" at all: Everyone in its jails is either a common criminal or a "Communist."

In fact, as everyone in South Vietnam knows, people are arrested for having sheet music of an anti-war song, for carrying rice at night, for any reason that strikes a police whim. Many are not tried but held indefinitely on suspicion. Just two weeks ago a union leader held without trial after a strike for higher wages was reported to have been tortured to death.

In evident embarrassment over its political prisoners, the Thieu government has been reluctantly turning them as guilty of common crimes such as disturbing the peace—often again without trial, of course. And it has announced that it will turn over to the Viet Cong, as "Communists," some of the best-known persons arrested because they opposed the war or Thieu.

It is especially wrong for the United States to avert its public eye from these realities. For the police system of South Vietnam is an American creation. The Central Intelligence Agency devised the Phoenix program to hunt out Viet Cong suspects, which began the official torture. William Colby, the nominee for new director of the CIA, testified that between 1968 and May, 1971, alone, 20,587 suspects were killed. More than $14 million in American money is still available or budgeted for aid to the Saigon police and prisons. Rather than helping the United States should be protesting police inhumanity in South Vietnam.

Mr. Friedman permits himself as is his mode to consider wisdom of abolishing the PD But he believes absolutely in wisdom of repealing the 18 amendment to the Food, Dr and Cosmetic Act, as show everyone who is scheduled suffer or die from some disease other whose abatement is as undiscovered, and that men for the sake of caution, ever one.

Blacks and God

Marjorie Rye (LET, July 5) delineates the theological difference between Billy Graham and the (Atlanta) Black community in absurdly simplistic terms: the former believes that God alone can cope with human problems, the latter doesn't. For once, she reads Graham right, but that blanket attribution of faithlessness to "the black community" does not earn confidence in other points in her tendentious piece.

Pride of the Hungry

In his article "Drought and Pride" (LET, July 3), Stanley Meisler has brilliantly established the fact that pride is a major catalyst of poverty in the drought-stricken countries of Africa. He has made a heartfelt appeal to the developing nations to renounce all pride and false self-respect.

Certainly, we cannot tolerate the arrogance of a dog which does not wag its tail while eating the crumbs of bread that we throw before it. We the affluent have every reason to be self-satisfied about the immense charity we consistently show to our poor brothers in the "Third World," although some of those "savages" wrongly accuse us of making millions of their people subservient to us culturally and economically. It is really surprising to see that our charity and care are so suffocating and repulsive to these hungry folks. Our selfish motives in helping them are crystal clear to the whole world.

I congratulate Mr. Meisler for trying to revitalize our faltering conviction that we are, however superior to them, I agree with him that in spite of all natural calamities and congenital disadvantages, humility on the part of the Africans is the sure means to fight their poverty.

GEORGE KONDOTERA,
Louvain, Belgium.

Destined to Die

One of the most poignant things about the end of World War I was the soldiers who were killed the day before the Armistice.

Equally poignant will be the deaths of those men, women and children in Cambodia who are destined to die from the American bombing between now and Aug. 15.

MARGARET HALSEY,

An Appeal For a New Drug Policy

By William Buckley Jr.

NEW YORK—A professor at the University of California charged last week almost parenthetically that 10,000 deaths from malaria in Ceylon in 1966 can be attributed to the late Raulo Gerson, whose book "The Silent Spring" brought on the crisis in the ecology crisis. The latter is what we all knew about. The former is what happens when one's concerns for the ecology become fanatical. When this happens, for instance, you find yourself saying that it is better to prohibit the use of DDT, to cause the chemical fallout that poisons our grandchildren's claim than to kill the mosquitoes who may give malaria to our grand children's grandparents like to tomorrow. The need for balance in the ecological wars is very great.

As also in the related world of drugs. We are, one gathers very soon to hear that the scores of a few years ago about cyclamates was exaggerated. I don't know—or, more accurately, I don't know—whether this means that further research has discredited the research that its credited cyclamates. Or whether a balanced application of the cost/benefit ratio, as the scientists call it, establishes that whereas for everyone who drink 50 cyclamate Tab soft drinks a day, and runs the risk of contracting cancer, there are 100 who take less than 50 cyclamate drinks a day who are scheduled to die from whatever it is the avoidance of which the cyclamate might not have happened if we drank Tabs rather than Coke.

A Paralysis

Prof. Stephen de Felice won last year a book called "Drug Discovery—The Pending Crisis" (Medcom Press), in which he records his dismay over the paralysis in drug development caused largely by the Kefauver-Harris Bill that came in 10 years ago after the thalidomide crisis. It was then that a few deformed children were born, the result of the use of that drug. Was followed, Dr. de Felice says, by his writings and speeches, by something akin to hysteria.

"The effort now required to evaluate a new investigation drug in man would eliminate the Pasteurs, Jenners, Ehrlichs, and Domagks from our drug discovery system," says Dr. de Felice, pointing out that for all the billions in drug discovery during the forties and fifties, which should have resulted in exponential progress during the sixties very little of radical therapeutic nature was in fact discovered during the sixties.

Prof. Milton Friedman recent called attention to a cost analysis of the U.S. Food and Drug Administration's program done by Prof. Sam Peltzman of UCL. In which the professor attempts by ingenious means to put dollar value on the net result of the harsh anti-innovation legislation. He began by conceding all over the place, the human tragedy of a deformed child cannot be measured in dollar terms. But it can be measured in terms of a child who was scheduled to die, a child who was scheduled to die, a child who was scheduled to die.

Time Lag

It is his assumption that the FDA cannot stop progress very long, that brilliant new drugs will flow in from the quarters of the world. But insists that there is at least two-year time lag directly traceable to the FDA's fanaticism. Summarizing his findings, Friedman writes, "Friedman estimates that postponing the introduction (of tuberculosis drug two years would have saved about 45,000 additional deaths from tuberculosis, and twice that number in additional persons with tuberculosis out of a much smaller population than today."

And then one of those unexpected "tuberculosis" developments tends not to exist. The drug industry, one would think, would become a fier lobby for experimentation, as the development of new, profitable drugs. It isn't. The reason the FDA's stodginess, imparts applied, discourages the competition equally.

Mr. Friedman permits himself as is his mode to consider wisdom of abolishing the PD But he believes absolutely in wisdom of repealing the 18 amendment to the Food, Dr and Cosmetic Act, as show everyone who is scheduled suffer or die from some disease other whose abatement is as undiscovered, and that men for the sake of caution, ever one.

When Face-Lift Patients Are Men

By Leonard Greenwood

RIO DE JANEIRO.—The commander of the jet airliner walked back through the passengers' cabin to speak to the chief stewardess and all the way felt that people were looking at him,
thinking, "Is that old man the pilot? What if he has a heart attack?"

Indexing the Ambiguities In British and American

By Naomi Barry

LONDON (IHT).—Norman Moss
was born in London and cut his teeth on the British language.
Taken to New York as a child,
he grew up on the American language. As an adult, he returned to Britain and became a radio and television reporter for the American public.

The confusion of our mutual language, proliferated and the slips multiplied on his tongue. To clarify his own margin for error,
he decided to index the ambiguities with an American-British-English dictionary entitled, "What's the Difference?"

"The differences added up to 192
pages which have just been published by Hutchinson of London.
Harper & Row will bring out the divergences in September in the United States.

Even if you never open your mouth in English, Moss's compendium is fascinating reading.
For Europeans, it confirms the old suspicion that the "Anglo-Saxons" are very complicated and how can you divine what any of them are talking about, no matter what they seem to be saying.

To table, for an American,
means to set aside a motion
rather than discuss it. In British "parliamentary" language, this means to put down for discussion, the exact opposite of the American meaning. At the 1962
Geneva Disarmament Conference,
the American and British delegations spent a large part of an afternoon locked in argument about whether to table a certain British motion before they found out they were on the same side.
The Americans kept saying, "to the Britons' confusion, 'But it's a very good motion. Why do you want to table it?"

The American "sneaker" is a gym shoe. American book shops are "piling up with thick crepe soles." A British "piling up" is a sneaker. There is a connection.
The "Pileman's mark," according to Webster, "is a load-line on an ocean-going cargo ship. The word commemorates Samuel Pileman, a 15th-century leader of shipping reform."

The colloquialism for British sneakers, writes Moss, is called

When he got back from the trip, he did what an increasing number of men are doing today
—he consulted a plastic surgeon and went to a Rio clinic to have a face-lift.

"It might just have been a bad
day," the pilot said, "but the impression was very strong. I knew they were thinking it, and I had to do something about it."

It was only the appearance of his face that bothered him, the pilot said. He is tall, slim and athletic, in his early 30s. He is in exceptionally good physical shape,
he does not drink or smoke, has a happy marriage and loves his children. He swims well, plays tennis, is a member of a volleyball squad and, when he is in Rio,
he runs on the beach every morning.

"But I have almost white hair,
and recently I had started to sag
a bit at the jaw and under the eyes," he said. "I suppose it's just that I'm that type."

The operation was done during his vacation. Only his family knew. He went back to work leaving about the face and one of the young stewardesses who works with him said: "My God, you look well. Your holiday must have done you good."

A Capital

Rio de Janeiro has become one of the capitals of plastic surgery in recent years, and men and women travel from all over the world to spend a few days in a Rio de Janeiro clinic to come out with their new look.

Leaders in the profession here
point out one of the most impressive trends in plastic surgery is the rapidly increasing number of men who are having facelifts. Dr. Pedro Valente, a well-known plastic surgeon, says that 10 years ago only 5 percent of the patients were men. Now, he says, 20 percent are men and this percentage is rising.

At a recent conference of surgeons in Rio, Dr. Valente said that one of the reasons driving men to have face-lifts is competition for jobs in a world in which the accent is on youth.

Rejuvenation

"There are some men whose facial skin stretches and sags, no matter how well they look after their physical condition," Dr. Valente said. "They keep fit, live a healthy life, have a sensible diet,
they good clothes and keep themselves well groomed. Half our plastic surgery operations on men
are for rejuvenation."

"Most of them are men in jobs
where they come into contact with the public, such as publications or entertainment. Their appearance is important. They say they have no problems about ability to do the job, but that many of the men around them are younger and that they have noticed that older men are not getting promoted."

There are cases of men who found other jobs in the same business after plastic surgery. Dr.
Valente says he has had 10 such cases in the last few years. Then there was a man who was fired
for a face lift and later fought
his way back into his old job.
Such cases, however, are extremely rare, and plastic surgeons generally warn their clients not to expect too much.

Cleanup in the Times Square Area

THE mural by Alvin Loving on a building overlooking pornographic bookstores at the corner of New York's Avenue of the Americas and 43d Street is part of a new campaign to upgrade the Times Square area. As part of the effort, the Durst Organization, a real-estate concern with extensive holdings in the area, said that it would convert the Aristo Hotel, formerly a prostitutes' hangout, into a dozen residence studios for artists. Loving got $1,500 for the mural from the Durst group and City Walls Inc., a nonprofit organization.

Entertainment in New York

NEW YORK, July 16 (IHT).—
This is how critics for The New York Times rate new films
and productions:

"The Man Who Loved Cat Dancing," starring Burt Reynolds and Sarah Miles in the post-Civil War West, got an unfavorable review. "Most of the movie is a desultory chase: the officer-gentleman-train robber (Reynolds), the woman (Miss Miles)
and some outlaws in the lead,
pursued by a sheriff (Lee J. Cobb),
the woman's husband (George Hamilton) and a posse." Vincent Canby notes. Technically, it's a kind of festival of incompetence. Each shot is held slightly too long or too short,
and is somehow off-center. Each performance is uncertain, like something seen in an early rehearsal. The screenplay, based on Marilyn Durham's novel, is by Eleanor Perry ("David and Lisa," "Diary of a Mad Housewife"). Richard Sarafian directed.

"Charley and the Angel," directed by Vincent McEveety, a Walt Disney production with screenplay by Roswell Rogers, based on Will Stanton's "The Golden Evenings of Summer," got a fair review from Howard Thompson. "The only real fun, judging by audience squeals, is the finale, involving some wildly
flapping old fiver cars, as Fred MacMurray tries to rescue his two young sons from gangster bootleggers. Otherwise, nothing much happens. The picture, set in the Depression years, has a mildly diverting facade of nostalgia in costumes, tunes and those fine,
tacky old cars. Mr. MacMurray,
by now a Disney veteran, is front and center, unremarkably wide-eyed."

"Operation Leontine," directed by Michel Andard (French with English subtitles), got a poor review. Roger Greenspan sums it up as "a heavily artificial comicoper movie about an aged French queen of crime (Françoise Rosay)

who temporarily leaves her retirement to outwit, outmurder, and outsteal all the hottest talent in Paris—including her own fast-thinking, two-timing young niece (Marlene Jobert). There is a story behind all this, Greenspan points out, but it is of no account. "What the film does care about is some not terribly exalted notion of cinema style—or stylishness," Greenspan says, "which it does its endless, agonizing, suffocating, unfunny best to exploit."

"The Hireling," Alan Bridges's film version of the L.P. Hartley novel about England in the 1930s, country aristocracy and cruelties
of the class system got a mixed review from Vincent Canby.
"Very good in individual scenes,
in the look of its landscapes, in its observation of manners and especially in its refusal to over-explain narrative details," Canby observes. "However, by effectively reducing the conflicts within the English social order to a misunderstanding, it becomes not only silly but grossly misleading.

The characters in Wolf Mankowitz's screenplay simply aren't very interesting, despite a calm, intelligent performance by Miss (Sarah) Miles and an almost diabolical one by (Robert) Shaw."

"Node Without Violin," Noel
Coward's comedy revived Off-Broadway by Lolly's Theater got a favorable review from Howard Thompson. "The revival now of this Broadway failure is a bit unhappy," Thompson comments.
"Here is the master, himself recently departed, wryly exposing art-world sham, through the legacy of a departed, titan
painter. The vultures descend.
It is impossible not to think of still a third departed figure. Already there are rumblings of dis-sentiment over the Picasso estate.
For all its bite, however, the play
is 'so funny that the cynicism is tactfully muffled.' Guinc Plager directs the cast headed by Lynne E. Moss.

THE ARTS AGENDA

The first Corfu International Festival of the Performing Arts
will be held on the Greek island through July 29, with most of the performances taking place in the gardens of a 17th-century
villa near the village of Gastouri.
The conductor Thomas Schippers
is musical director of the festival,
and Vincent Piacentini has designed a 500-seat canvas-and-steel amphitheater for the event.
Among the performers scheduled are the New York Pro Musica
with its production of Marco da Gagliano's "Daphne," the Manhattan String Quartet, the Polish Mime Theater, actor
Emlyn Williams, pianist Peter Serkin, and Greek musical performers.

London's South Bank Summer Season, which will run this year through Sept. 14, includes six subdivisions presenting Russian and Italian opera films, the Ballet Folklórico de Mexico, a summer music and workshop
season, a week of nature films,
the London Festival Ballet and a Gilbert & Sullivan week. The centenary of the birth of Sergei Rachmaninov will be the main theme of the Summer Music concerts, and other themes will be French composers and the music of Benjamin Britten, while the composer-in-residence will be Nicholas Maw. Among the operatic films will be one of Rossini's
"Barber of Seville" with Teresa Berganza and Hermann Frey, conducted by Claudio Abbado, in a production based on the recent La Scala production and recording of the work.

Under the heading of "Jeunesse d'Amérique en Concerts," three free concerts will be given in Paris by as many groups, each 250 strong, of young American instrumental and choral musicians.

They will be July 17 at 4 p.m.
in the Luxembourg Gardens, July 23 at 9 p.m. in the Trinité Church, and July 29 at 2 p.m. in Notre Dame. The same groups will give concerts this summer in London, Namur, Ghent, Salzburg,
Venice, Florence and Rome.

The Other Company, the London theater group, will stage a spectacle entitled "The Lunatics Take Over the International House" July 17 and 18 at 8:30 p.m. at the International House, 27 Rue Mazarine in Paris.

The American Repertory Theater in Europe, on its fifth summer tour, will perform Shake-spear's "The Taming of the Shrew" on July 18 and 19 in the Teatro Romano, Fiesole (near Florence), on July 22 and 24 in the Campo San Zaccaria in Venice, July 26 in the Parco Civico
of Lugano, Switzerland, and July 27 in the Teatro Romano in Verona, Italy. On July 29, 30 and 31, it will perform "The Wit to Woo," a compilation of Shake-spear's scenes on Elizabethan
courtship, at the Teatro di Galtala in Florence, a campus of Fleming College Florence, which sponsors the theater group.

The Harkness Ballet of New York will appear from July 33
to 28 at the Théâtre des Champagnes in Paris with a repertoire that includes "Percussion for Six Dancers," choreographed by Vicente Nebrada to a score by Lee Gurst, and "Firebird," in a version by Brian Macdonald,
on all six evenings. "Cerebonais,"
by Norman Walker to music by Alberto Ginastera, and "Gemini" (Nebrada-Mahler) will be on the first program (July 23-24), while the second program will include
"Sebastian" (Nebrada-Menotti).

REGIONAL MANAGER

Ethicals Marketing

BEECHAM's recent spectacular growth in Europe has been based on the strong, nationally managed marketing groups which were established in each country. The emphasis has been on local decision making and control to achieve agreed and ambitious sales objectives. Countries are grouped under regional managers whose role is to monitor progress, influence strategy and provide advice and support in marketing, organization and planning. The growth has now created the need to strengthen the regional management team by appointing a man whose region will include Spain, some smaller markets and probably Italy. He could be of any nationality but he must be fluent in English and Spanish and desirably have conversational Italian. He will be able to show that he is an experienced and skilled manager and ethical marketing executive who has worked at a senior level for a demanding international company.
He is unlikely to be under 35 and he will have had some experience in the Spanish

Japan, U.S. Divided Over Trade

TOKYO, July 16 (AP-DJ).—The Japan-U.S. ministerial-level economic talks that opened today are failing to live up to initial expectations that they would be a bland and featureless event.

So far, the talks have been marked by sharp criticism of U.S. economic management by Japan's foreign minister, by a new U.S. ploy concerning relations between oil-producing and consuming nations and by U.S. pressure for more Japanese trade concessions despite a sharp improvement in the bilateral imbalance.

As Japan's trade surplus with the United States is currently running around half the $4.2 billion level of 1972, the Japanese delegates were not expecting any pressure for additional concessions, especially as the United States has recently asked Japan to limit imports of timber and steel scrap, and has forced Japan to accept reduced shipments of soybeans and other farm products.

More U.S. Imports Urged

However, William Eberle, the Nixon administration's special trade negotiator, told the Japanese that the growth rate of their imports from the United States is trailing the growth rate of Japan's overall imports.

He also said the Japanese are not importing enough U.S. manufactured products and suggested that the Tanaka administration might procure strategic commodities, such as cobalt and aluminum, being released from U.S. stockpiles.

Mr. Eberle asked his Japanese counterparts to note that much of the improvement in the U.S.-Japan trade balance has stemmed from price increases. He requested that the Tanaka administration consider the possible export-push effects of its current tight money policy.

Frederick Dent, U.S. Secretary of Commerce, suggested that Japan might lift its import controls on integrated circuits and computers sooner than scheduled (in 1974 and 1975 respectively) and that Japan might remove remaining barriers to U.S. participation in the country's retail trade.

Mr. Dent also asked that U.S. firms be allowed to participate in the bidding for Japanese government procurement contracts.

Yasuhito Nakasone, Japan's Minister of International Trade and Industry, said he hoped the United States would make more of an effort to export its products. Mr. Dent agreed with the need for this and said the Nixon administration would take measures to increase the competitiveness of U.S. exports.

In the field of commodities, U.S. participants asked the Japanese to import oranges and orange juice, and to stabilize their purchase of steel scrap and newbies.

The Japanese expressed concern that the United States is moving to restrict exports of raw cotton, but Mr. Dent said the Nixon administration is only studying this in this field.

The U.S. participants sought to assure the Japanese that export controls on farm products are temporary and that Japan can count on stable supplies of these goods from the United States in the future.

But the officials stopped short of promising any special consideration to the Japanese, who feel they deserve it in view of their position as America's biggest farm-products customer.

Foreign Minister Masayoshi Ohira reflected growing Japanese irritation over trade controls with a blunt call on the United States to "exercise an increasing degree of discipline in managing its own economy."

In the multilateral area, Paul A. Volcker, Under Secretary of the Treasury, said trade and monetary affairs are so closely connected in the changing world economy that a new approach is needed for dealing with these matters.

Mr. Ohira said, however, that trade and monetary affairs are independent matters and Japan does not believe a package solution would be desirable.

Mr. Ohira said that Japan will enter the coming international trade talks with a willingness to review its position on the question of import safeguards. So far, Japan has favored a safeguard clause that would be more difficult to apply than those favored by the United States and by most European countries.

Mr. Eberle said he is optimistic that the House of Representatives Ways and Means Committee will pass a satisfactory trade bill before September.

The new U.S. ploy in the petroleum field centered on a statement by U.S. Secretary of State William P. Rogers that the favored position currently enjoyed by the oil-producing countries is temporary, as new forms of energy will soon ease the oil supply problem. He called for Japan and other consuming countries to limit destructive competition, such as needlessly bidding up prices, in the interim.

Mr. Rogers claimed a stable petroleum market would be to the advantage of both producing and consuming nations.

Japanese conference participants refrained from promising any cooperation in this matter outside of negotiations that would involve producing as well as consuming nations.

Bank Raises Prime Rate to 8.5 Percent*Other U.S. Concerns Seen Following Soon

NEW YORK, July 16 (AP).—First National City Bank of Chicago announced today it is increasing its prime rate, the minimum lending fee it charges its largest customers, to 8 1/2 percent from 8 1/4 percent, effective tomorrow.

If the increase in the prime lending rate becomes industry-wide, and other banks are believed likely to follow suit within the next few days, it will match the record prime rate high of June, 1969.

The move by the Chicago bank, the nation's 10th largest commercial bank, comes two weeks after a general quarter-point increase of the prime rate to 8 1/4 percent by most commercial banks.

An increase in the prime rate has no direct and immediate effect on a bank's loans to smaller businesses and consumers, but it can signal future increases in interest rates generally.

Excluding the Chicago bank's increase today, the prime rate has risen 2 percentage points since the beginning of the year.

Two smaller banks made gestures late last week at increasing their prime rates to 8 1/2 percent before the Nixon administration's Committee on Interest and Dividends asked them to roll back.

The committee remained silent during the last move to 8 1/4 percent. Credit analysts say the increases are due to ballooning costs of short-term credit and heavy demand for bank loans by corporations decreasing the available supply of money for lending.

Chauncey Schmidt, vice-chairman of the Chicago bank, said the higher interest rate will "help temper the booming demand for business loans."

A spokesman for the Committee on Interest and Dividends said he had no comment on the move by the Chicago bank.

The dollar declined slightly in Europe in quiet trading.

LONDON, July 16 (AP-DJ).—The dollar declined against major European currencies today in what some foreign exchange dealers described as a "quiet" and "subdued" interbank market.

President Nixon's illness, Friday's sharp decline in New York Stock Exchange prices and the absence of central bank support were cited as factors that weakened confidence in the dollar.

Though First National Bank of Chicago raised its prime rate a quarter point to 8.5 percent and other big U.S. banks were expected to make similar increases, the dollar's exchange rate failed to respond.

At the close in Frankfurt, the dollar was quoted at 2.36 marks, down from 2.35 Friday. Similarly, the dollar declined to 2.8443 Swiss francs from 2.8450 and to 2.8060 guilders from 2.8265. For commercial transactions in French francs, the dollar declined to 4.0775 from 4.08, Sterling rose to $2.5487 from $2.5425.

Gold was set at $119.90 an ounce at the London afternoon fixing, compared with $119.15 in the morning and $121 Friday afternoon.

Japan Indexes Rise

TOKYO, July 16 (AP-DJ).—Japan's mining and manufacturing production indexes (1970 equals 100) stood at 129.12 in May, up 2.7 percent from April, after a seasonal adjustment. The Ministry of International Trade and Industry reported.

FINANCIAL NEWS AND NOTES*Car Sales Increase in U.S.

Automobile makers in the United States sold 214,912 cars in the first 10 days of July, up 27.5 percent from 168,534 in the comparable period a year ago. The daily selling rate rose to 30,702 units from 24,085 a year ago, topping the previous record rate for the period of 25,455 set in 1966.

General Motors sold a total of 88,610 cars in the period, a rise of 13 percent; Ford's sales rose 9.4 percent to 79,031 units; Chrysler sales were 27,889 cars, up 15.3 percent and American Motors sold 9,372, an increase of 42.9 percent. The figures for Ford were affected this year by a sales contest.

Norton's Offer for BSA Succeeds

The takeover offer by Norton Villiers Triumph Ltd. for Birmingham Small Arms Ltd. (BSA) has succeeded. BSA says the offer drew acceptance from holders of 94.5 percent of its ordinary shares, 78.7 percent of the "A" preference shares and 74.4 percent of the "B" preference shares.

The takeover offer is part of government-assisted rescue of BSA, which has suffered heavy losses in recent years. Under the plan, Norton, a subsidiary of Manganese Bronze Holdings Ltd., is being merged with BSA into a new company known as Norton Villiers Triumph Ltd.

EEC to Aid Shipbuilding Industry

The Common Market commission is planning a Europe-wide action program to help the ailing shipbuilding industry, hard-hit by Japanese competition. The commission has set up a special task force to intensify contacts with industry, unions and governments and reach a negotiated consensus of opinion on solutions for the shipbuilding industry. Japan now builds nearly half of the world's ships. Shipbuilders in the Common Market supply only 23 percent, down from 50 percent a decade ago.

Watney Takes Up Stern Unit Shares

Watney Mann has taken up its 37.5 percent direct share in the Stern Brewery group unit Dortmund Stifte-Brauerei Carl Funk AG. The shares are the 25 percent holding of Commerzbank AG and the 12.5 percent holding of the Funk family. A further 57.5 percent of the Dortmund brewery is held by Stern. Through its 76 percent holding in Stern, announced in May, Watney Mann now controls directly and indirectly 95 percent of the Dortmund shares.

Profit Rise Seen for Belgian Firms

Net income of major Belgian companies is expected to rise 15 percent this year from 1972, a slight acceleration from the 14 percent growth rate of last year, Kredietbank says in its annual survey of company profits. Industrial companies are expected to earn 20 percent more, financial companies 15 percent and utilities 5 percent more. Overall, the bank predicts a continuation of Belgium's economic growth. Industrial production is expected to rise 7 percent, but productivity gains are unlikely to exceed 5 percent and wage cost per unit produced is likely to rise more than 5 percent.

Court Decides Accounting by Pirelli Invalid

MILAN, July 16 (AP-DJ).—A Milan court ruled today that the balance sheets of Pirelli SPA for the fiscal years of 1962 through 1969 were invalid because they were based on "false published information and illegal allocations of profits."

The ruling covers the eight years before creation of the Dunlop-Pirelli Union, under which the British Dunlop group, renamed Dunlop Holdings Ltd., pooled with Pirelli SPA and S&I Internationale Pirelli SA all Pirelli and Dunlop activities worldwide.

Part of the financial arrangements of the union were based on the balance sheets for Pirelli SPA.

An official spokesman for Pirelli SPA said that the civil ruling, if upheld on the company's planned appeal, would lead to a penal hearing and only then would "malicious fraud" be decided.

He said that the civil ruling referred more to the form in which the balance sheets were published than to their contents.

Thus, he said, the effects of the ruling would be nil. Furthermore, because of the "direct" ruling of the Dunlop-Pirelli Union, it would probably be impossible to redraw the balance sheets.

At any rate, he emphasized the union was in no way endangered nor would it have to be altered.

The ruling cites Article 2621 of the Italian civil code. "This provides for jail terms of one to five years and fines of 80,000 to 800,000 lire for persons who:

"In public statements, balance sheets or other company communications fraudulently set forth information that does not correspond to the truth concerning the constitution or the economic conditions of the company, or conceals relevant facts in whole or in part."

"As administrators or directors general, lacking an approved balance sheet or using distorted figures or employing false figures in any way, collect or pay out profits that are imaginary or are not available for distribution."

Market Gains But Buying Is Slow, Careful*Turnover Stays Light As Dow Rises by 11.6

NEW YORK, July 16 (AP).—New York Stock Exchange prices registered big gains today but trading was slow and buying careful.

The Dow Jones industrial average gained steadily throughout the session, winning 11.59 points and closing at 897.58.

Advancing issues outperformed decliners by over 2 to 1, but volume totaled only 12.92 million shares, compared with a light 11.99 million on Friday.

Brokers attributed some encouragement to news that President Nixon is recovering and that Phase-4 details are expected soon.

Brokers ascribed a sharp market loss Friday in part to the President's illness and concern that the current price freeze might continue indefinitely.

Glamorous and blue chips spearheaded the advance. Disney gained 5 1/4 to 89 1/2. Polaroid 5 1/8 to 137 1/2. Burroughs 4 3/4 to 128. Texas Instruments 4 1/2 to 96. Eastman Kodak 5 1/8 to 139 3/4 and IBM 9 to 319.

Westinghouse Electric picked up 1 5/8 to 35 3/4. The company said it has received orders for more than $275 million for nuclear steam supply systems and fuel from a group of five utilities.

DuPont rose 2 1/2 to 169, after reporting second-quarter earnings of $3.38 a share versus $2.35. Automatic Data Processing advanced 3 1/3 to 43 7/8. MGIC Investment 4 1/3 to 73. CMI Investment 3 3/8 to 37 7/8. Curtiss-Wright 2 to 32 7/8. Combustion Engineering 2 3/4 to 74 3/4 and Gino's 1 3/8 to 17.

On the American Stock Exchange, prices closed higher in light trading. The Amex index rose 0.13 to 22.77, and advances outnumbered declines 533 to 368. Volume was 2.36 million shares, compared with 2.07 million Friday.

Industrial Output Increases in U.S.

WASHINGTON, July 16 (AP-DJ).—U.S. industrial production rose by a slim 0.3 percent in June, the Federal Reserve Board reported today.

The report said that production of factories, mines and utilities rose to 123.9 percent of the 1967 average, which was the smallest rise since a similar 0.3 percent gain in July 1972.

The June rise compared with an upward-revised 0.7 percent increase in May. The May advance originally had been reported as 0.5 percent.

The report showed that output of business equipment and industrial materials showed continued gains but consumer goods production dipped 0.7 percent.

Panel Rejects Plan for U.S. Import Quotas

WASHINGTON, July 16 (AP-DJ).—The House Ways and Means Committee today defeated an attempt to write mandatory import quotas into the trade legislation.

In a 16 to 8 vote, the committee defeated a proposal of Rep. James A. Burke, D., Mass., that would have required quotas to be imposed if imports penetrated at least 15 percent of the U.S. market.

This was the first test in the committee of sentiment for the protectionist Burke-Hartke trade bill supported by organized labor.

After the vote, Rep. Burke predicted the defeat of his amendment "will mean a loss of two to three million jobs over the next five years."

The ruling cities Article 2621 of the Italian civil code. "This provides for jail terms of one to five years and fines of 80,000 to 800,000 lire for persons who:

"In public statements, balance sheets or other company communications fraudulently set forth information that does not correspond to the truth concerning the constitution or the economic conditions of the company, or conceals relevant facts in whole or in part."

Accord Reached On Bullion Sales By Governments

WASHINGTON, July 16 (AP).—International finance officials have generally agreed that governments should be able to sell gold on the open market in a restructured monetary system, a key official working on reform has said.

Jeremy Morse, who is chairman of a deputy group of Committee of 20 finance officials trying to reach agreement on world monetary reform, said they agree that such gold sales will be a feature of the new system. He was speaking after the group ended a three-day meeting here on Friday.

But Mr. Morse said gold is not a key issue. He indicated that the group's negotiations are still bogged down, with most main issues unsettled.

Mr. Morse pointed out that nations appear to be closer than they were before on some of these issues, but that it is now time for finance ministers to meet and settle some of the problems.

Strong club systems have proliferated in recent years, and nearly all of them agree that the strong artificial opening bid needs about 17 high-card points, give or take a point. But there is a wide divergence of view about the best way to respond, with a sharp division between those favoring natural responses and those preferring artificial control-showing responses.

In the latter group, one of the most original and effective systems is the "Simplified Club" devised by Larry Weiss of Los Angeles, who held the South cards on the diagrammed deal from a regional championship.

The strong club opening followed by the one no-trump rebid theoretically showed a minimum of 15 points. He regarded the strong first-card diamond suit as the equivalent of a point. North's response of one spade showed four controls, counting an ace as two and a king as one.

North's bid of two hearts showed a five-card suit, and his later successive club bids showed six cards in that suit. South eventually by one-bid the spade ace, which was all the encouragement North needed to bid the club slam. Through the accident of the artificial opening, South became the declarer.

The opening lead was a spade, and when South won with the ace he immediately cashed the diamond ace to discard dummy's remaining spade. The problem now was to insure that not more than one trick be lost in the heart suit.

At both tables in a team match South made the routine move of leading the heart jack, and West's king was taken by the ace.

Now the contract was in jeopardy. One declarer continued blithely with the heart queen, perhaps expecting to make an overtrick and went down in the slam. West ruffed, and there was only one discard and one safe ruff to dispose of the remaining hearts in the dummy.

West, however, realized that he was in danger. After taking the heart ace he made the unusual play of leading a small heart from the dummy. East won, but South was in control. Whatever the return he could ruff one heart loser with the club king, discard a heart on his other diamond winner, and draw trumps. The heart queen became a brick after West's trumps had disappeared.

SPEAK TO ME, DANCE WITH ME

By Agnes de Mille. Atlantic-Little, Brown. 494 pp. $8.95.

Reviewed by Anna Kisselgoff

THIS is a bitchy book and a welcome. It lets us in on the screaming and yelling that go on backstage in the theater and in the dance world. As usual, Miss De Mille's latest autobiographical volume is a refreshing antidote to the souvenir-program view of the performing arts.

In the case of ballet, the articles in the handsome, illustrated programs have often served as the first written history of a company's beginnings and its achievements. The accent is always on the positive, even the heroic. Between hard covers, the souvenir-program school, for instance, has until very recently consistently depicted the growth of British ballet in the 1930s as a noble cooperative effort by all concerned.

This is not quite the full story, as we read in "Speak to Me, Dance With Me," which focuses upon Miss De Mille's personal life and budding career as a dancer and choreographer in London from 1933 to 1936. A first-hand witness to the infancy of modern British ballet, she notes that the founding mothers—Marie Rambert of Ballet Rambert and Ninette de Valois of the Royal Ballet—are now Dames of the British Empire. And she adds: "They were nothing of the sort then and they gave each other short shrift."

The tone here is very different from the not uncritical but generous almost stage-struck ebullience that ran through "Dance to the Piper," Miss De Mille's earlier memoir, published in 1952. If the author takes a harder look at her family and associates now, she is also more frank about and with herself.

In 1933, she went to London to perform and study with Rambert's ballet club, which spawned two great choreographers now well known here—Antony Tudor and Frederick Ashton. Some of the finest passages in this book are devoted to superb analyses of their work. Miss De Mille is an excellent critic.

For while "Speak to Me, Dance With Me" appears concerned primarily with her emotional problems and disastrous romances in London, it is also a detailed valuable account of a professional learning her craft. Could the self-described "overweight pantomimist" of 1933 have produced the choreography of "Oklahoma!" in 1943 without the ballet classes in Notting Hill?

Much of the present text consists of letters written at the time by Miss De Mille to her mother. Upon her editor's advice, some passages have been deleted as libelous. The remainder makes for some still lively reading and even livelier are her current judgments on her past associates.

Charles B. Cochran, the British producer who hired her as a "dance arranger" in Cole Porter's "Nymph Errand" but reneged on sponsoring her concert appearance, comes out a villain. Even those Miss De Mille admires most might desire equal time. She appears to have recorded every tactless remark uttered by Marie Rambert and the final portrait is less than kind. The interested reader might want to dig into Rambert's own recently published memoirs, "Quicksilver." As for Tudor, she writes: "Antony is no world figure and very bitter, occupies himself for the most part with restating his nine 'mag' pieces, teaching and uttering sardonic remarks."

Miss De Mille's assertion that Tudor could not create masterpieces after 1948 because he was artistically deserted by Loring, his main dancer friend, takes a simple view of it. In Miss De Mille's view Tudor could not produce great without Loring, who was choreographic collaborator, structural ideas, dramatic notions and merciless criticisms.

Yet could it also be that he did not find the 1950s congenial when the pendulum in the avant-garde point of view in art style rather than the biologically motivated ballet which Tudor was king?

Some of the material—a bit up of the first three London years with return visits home—has been covered in the writer's previous volumes. In a way, Miss De Mille is writing her own "Alexandros Quartet," the same story told from a different point of view in a different book. "Speak to Me, Dance With Me" allows her to introduce characters that have previously gone unnamed or unmentioned.

The new hero of her best story here is a paralyzed, courageous young Englishman named Ramon Reed. The role he played in Miss De Mille's life at the time and the impact his death, while in his early career, conveyed with both grace and power. In a few words, Miss De Mille's ballet "Three Kings and a Devil," Ramon Reed wrote his book.
